

ABSTRACT

Development of a country's economy can not be separated from the investment, both from public investment and investment from other countries. Investment is divided into 2 (two), ie direct investment (Direct Investment) and investment (indirect Investment). One form of indirect investment is an investment in the money market.

Investments in money market has characteristics similar to investing in the stock market, which has a special trading instrument and involve many parties in the trade. Each of trading in money market instruments have different characteristics in terms of both types of trading instruments and in terms of the parties involved in it. By knowing the ins and outs of investing in financial markets, will make it easier for the parties involved, especially potential investors in investing in the money market to avoid losses and disputes in the future.
